Once upon a time, there lived a king. He had a different system of justice in his kingdom. The system worked in this way: Whenever, a man committed a crime that the king would take a note of, the accused would be brought in the arena. All the people would also be invited. There arena had two exactly look alike doors. The accused would be allowed to open the door of his choice. Behind one door, there used to be a hungry tiger who would pounce upon the man would kill him on opening the door. The other door would have a beautiful lady behind it. On opening that door, the lady would come out and marry the accused.

The king had a beautiful daughter who had fallen in love with a young man in the kingdom. She was very possessive about the young man. Soon, the king discovered the love affair. Immediately, the young man was put in the prison and the date was fixed for his trial in the arena.

On the day of trial, the young man was brought to the arena. The princess knew the secret of the doors on that day. She knew behind which door stood the lady and behind which waited the tiger. The youth too knew this and he looked toward her for a signal. Her signal was toward the right, and the youth went to the door on the
